HYDRO the film is an underwater non verbal risky adaptation of Homer's Odyssey, created thanks to the Internet and the use of collaborative Creative Commons licenses. Included at the genre Non-Verbal Film developed by Ron Fricke (Baraka, 1992), offers a no-words epic trip, accompanied by sounds and large musical atmospheres. The footage includes recordings of almost all the oceans, lakes and rivers, experimental videos and animation. The non-verbal have no dialogue, no narration, no subtitles, no plot, no actors and no script. These films paint a picture, or provide a journey through vision and music alone.
